Within design, there are no truly original ideas. One's design product is a result of their design lens, built and influenced by every form of media consumed. What you listen to, look at, and experience all influence you as a designer. To harness your own curated design lens, you have to surround yourself with design that inspires you. If you purposely surround yourself with design you are attracted to, you will feel more inspired and strengthen your own unique design lens. It is vital to develop your unique design lens, this is what sets you apart from others. If you consistently make the effort to expose yourself to design you are attracted to, you will get closer to the designer you want to be. The importance of this exposure is very significant while actively designing; you must curate a comfortable and inspiring space where you create.
